Old Post-Doc designs new Post Logo

At 69, Dr. David Mitchell may be Britain’s oldest junior post-doctoral research worker. After 40 years running independent bookshop Scarthin Books in Derbyshire and raising a family he has finally found time to return to a discovery made while working on his Ph.D. (don’t read this: “Some Aspects of Flexible Transport Systems”) in the late 1960’s.

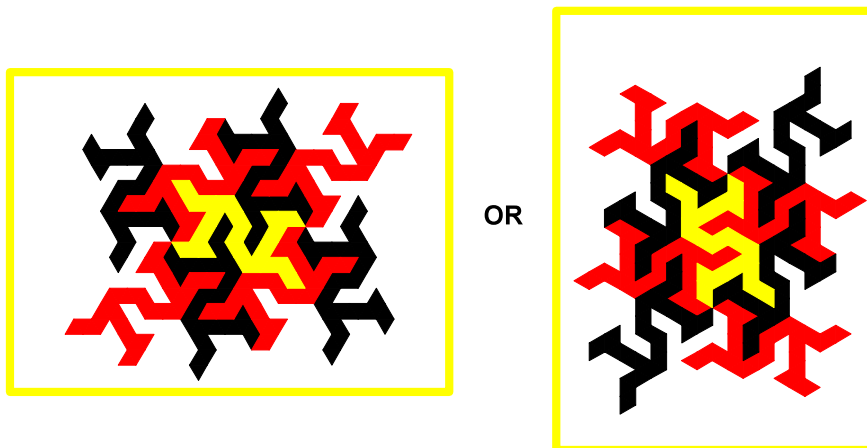

Dave’s book “Lattice Labyrinth Tessellations; Bold Art from Modest Mathematics” is shortly to be published by Tarquin. This workbook teaches you how to find any one of an infinite choice of intricate repeating patterns, reminiscent of the work of Escher or of Islamic tillers.

Among the patterns Dave has discovered is one he calls “LOGISTICAL NIGHTMARE”, a tessellation of interlocking postmen or parcel deliverers running in three different directions.

Here’s a bit of the boundless LOGISTICAL NIGHTMARE adapted as a sheet of gift wrap:

and HERE is a smaller-still portion that could be the basis of a great LOGO for the new PRIVATISED ROYAL MAIL. It’s in the official (unprivatised) Royal Mail colours:

Any assistance in putting forward this FANTASTIC idea will be appreciated.
